My concern relates to how developers carry out plans with the psuh to erode requirements of the original plan pver time. Given thje size of dvelopments and hte pitch requirements developers might deoced they will make for profit by a lower fee for commuting the commitment than providing on site. Could this be taken into account in finacial calculations so that developers are not profitting at the expense of provision for travellers?

Objexctionto cahnge of wording to a weker form of words "having regard to" is not as clear a commitment as "in accordance with" I support the previosu wording.

The definition of traveller is a best ambiguous and at worst discriminatory in that it appears to prohibit a lifestyle that is protected and not open to others to become a member of that way of life for whatever reasons they may have. This has the appearance of a longer term goal of eliminating the culture and community of Gypsy/ traveler rather than endorsing and supporting their thriving as a valuable contribution to cultural diversity.
